Utrecht Designed by Gerrit Thomas Rietveld

In 1935, Gerrit T. Rietveld was tasked with designing a mass producible chair for an Amsterdam department store. Not one to sacrifice quality or craftsmanship, he created Utrecht. Treating the chair's elements as separate units, he designed an easily manufactured piece with an appealing aesthetic that offers an extremely comfortable and relaxing sitting experience. Now considered an icon of the Neoplastic movement and Rietveld's experimental vision, Utrecht is available as a standard or wide lounge chair, two-seat sofa, and a three-seat sofa with a slight inward curve to encourage interaction.

Features

- Collection includes lounge chairs and sofas, with two sizes offered for each
- Three-seat sofa has a gentle curved shape that facilitates interaction
- Padding is polyurethane foam and polyester
- Upholstered in fabric or leather with blanket or zig-zag top stitching in a choice of colors
